However, when thinking of booking moving and packing services, there is something you should take into consideration.

You must not concentrate only on saving money. Obviously, asking a number of companies for quotation would be considerable, but do not just go for the cheapest. Especially in London, which is highly competitive area in terms of all businesses, there are many tricky people you should be aware of. How many times have you heard of "man and van for £20" that never appears? You haven't? Oh well, you are the lucky one then. Removal business is the kind of market where it is quite easy to get in, so many people just buy vans and start advertising in different places. They offer very cheap price as they don't have much expense. Nevertheless, once the removal is booked, it doesn't actually mean the van is going to turn up. If there is a client who offers better money straight away, it might happen that you are going to be waiting for nothing.

About 10 days ago one of our clients told us an interesting story that had happened to him. He booked man with a van for a reasonable price... as he thought. The man with a van appeared...lucky client. Both of them went upstairs to check all the items and discuss the details. Then, the removal man went, as he said, to the van to pick up the trolley. He drove away and did not even pick up the phone. After waiting for 30 minutes, hoping that the removal man just went to buy a sandwich, our client desperately started to call moving companies. So My Dear when you decide to book a removal, make sure you have a reliable source. Get your confirmation before the moving day and check the company details!
